River Is Searched For Priest

Government Says No Body Found By Vistula Divers

The Associated Press

WARSAW — Divers have failed to find the body of the Reverend Jerzy Popieluszko during a search of the Vistula River near the spot where the priest was abducted on Oct. 19, Warsaw Radio reported

A communiqué released by the Interior Ministry said the search for the pro-Solidarity priest was continuing with "highly specialized equipment," the radio said. The interior Ministry has said the 37-year-old priest was kidnapped and possibly killed by three of the minstry's security officers.

Meanwhile, riot police dispersed a demonstration Monday after-noon by about 1,000 Solidarity supporters in the southwestern city of Wroclaw, eyewitnesses said, Leaflets signed "Fighting Solidarity" had called for protests against the abduction of Father Popie-

According to the communique, one of the officers said he killed Father Popieluszko and threw his body into the Vistula near the northern city of Torun, where the abduction occurred. It said the two other men "pointed to a bay" on the river near Wloclawek, a town about 30 miles (48.5 kilometers) southeast of Torun.

The victim has not been found," the radio report said. "According to experts, there are strong currents at a place mentioned by the abductors, which make the search more difficult."

A captain and two lieutenants of the Interior Ministry have been charged in the abduction, Interior Minister Czeslaw Kiszczak announced Saturday, Mr. Kiszczak said the captain's claim that he killed Father Popieluszko was contradicted by the two other officers. who said the priest was released. The minister identified the captain as Grzegorz Piotrowski and the lewski and Leszek Pekala.

The Solidarity leader, Lech Walesa, urged supporters at a Mass on Sunday to avoid being provoked into "bloody revolution" by the kidnapping. He told a crowd in Gdansk that the abduction may have been an attempt to provoke the government's opponents.

The Polish leader, General Wojciech Jaruzelski, was quoted as saythat the authorities would deal firmly with "anti-socialist forces," which he said were stirring unrest and "trying to prey on a provoca-

Europeanization' of Western Defense: An Idea Whose Time Came and Went

By John Vinocur

New York Times Service ROME — A year ago, a group of West European NATO allies, ratwest European WATO anies, fai-tled by the public opinion prob-lems of deploying new U.S. nuclear missiles, began talking about a way to put a more visible European stamp on Western security policy.

The discussion fell under the general catch-word of "Europeanization," and it largely involved a plan to revivify the Western European Union, a little-used intergovernmental defense policy organiza-tion. The goal, beyond the officially stated desire to strengthen the Eu-ropean pillar of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, was to take a little distance from the Americans, and what was regarded as their overly confrontational style of dealing with the Soviet Union. Last weekend, plans for reorga-nizing the Western European with the plan came from a tourn with the plan came from a tourn Bulgarian, Mr. Agea said. Mr. Aneign and defense ministers of the tonov and Mr. Aivasov also have been indicted in the plot to kill the but the put-the-Americans-at-length undertone was virtually gone. In the space of a year, it appeared that a central concern of the Europeans had become keeping the United States close at hand.

What happened was that turmoil about the missiles subsided substantially, that Europe recognized that it lacks the money to consider on its own any major innovative dynamic partners." The problem steps in defense policy, and that the allies began to worry about any suggests, is not only that it risks initiative that might alienate the United States in its defense com-

But France has become nervous about the negative signs it sees for continued American commitment to Europe in U.S. defense plans for the next decades. It now agrees with countries like Britain that, considering the European allies economic difficulties, it hardly serves Europe's purposes to take postures that could be given anagonistic interpretations in the

U.S. Congress. Independents Give Reagan Widening Margin, Poll Finds

By Hedrick Smith
New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Walter F. Mondale's failure to attract broad support from political independents is blocking his efforts to overtake President Ronald Reagan in the homestretch of the political campaign, according to the latest New York Times-CBS News Poll.

Among the electorate as a whole, the survey showed that on the foreign policy issues that Mr. Mondale pressed in the Oct. 21 debate. more people side with him than with Mr. Reagan.

But Mr. Reagan's overwhelming strength on the economy and increasing doubts about Mr. Mondale's leadership have had a more powerful effect with most voters and have stalled Mr. Mondale's challenge, the poll indicated.

The survey was taken by telephone Oct. 23-25 among 1,068 reg-istered voters. Roughly half the probable voters said they were unwould handle a foreign crisis or manage the economy. Solid major-ines expressed confidence in Mr. Reagan in both areas.

Aside from the expected opposition among Republicans, the sur-vey showed the Democratic nominee running into particularly strong resistance among independents, among men and among the large block of voters in the 30-to-44-year-old bracket.

The New York Times-CBS News Poll indicated that the margin be-tween Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mondale has widened since mid-Octo-

The poll found that among probable voters 53 percent favored Mr. Reagan and 35 percent favored Mr. dale. In a Times-CBS News poll taken Oct. 14-17, 50 percent were for Mr. Reagan and 37 percent for Mr. Mondale. In both polls the overall percentages were subject to sampling error of plus or minus three percentage points.

More than two-thirds of those still undecided are over 45 years old, identify themselves either as Democrats or independents, and as ideologically moderate or conservative. Slightly more than half are women. On the pivotal questions of leadership, their views are closer to those of Reagan supporters than Mondale supporters.

The difference between men and women in voter preference was larger than ever in the most recent survey. Mr. Reagan did much bet-ter among men than Mr. Mondale while his margin among women was modest. The survey found Mr. Reagan was preferred among men by 59 to 29 percent and among women by just 47 to 41 percent, But the poli found that the economy was by far the most powerful issue driving the election. Fifty-five percent of those polled said it was the most important issue, and it works very strongly for Mr. Rea-

Moreover, Mr. Mondale has lost ground on what many political strategists consider the two most critical personal indicators: the public's perceptions of a candidate's leadership and its general reaction to a candidate.

After the first presidential debate on Oct. 7, a modest plurality rated Mr. Mondale a strong leader. But now, after the second debate, that plurality has turned negative, with 40 percent saying Mr. Mon-dale was strong and 45 percent saying he was not. By contrast, 70 percent say Mr. Reagan is a strong leader, a level he has maintained all

The poll indicated that Mr. Mondale faced formidable obstacles in his efforts to jar Mr. Reagan's support in the election. ■ Post Endorses Mondale

The Washington Post on Monday endorsed Mr. Mondale for president, saying he has been "maddeningly misread and mis-treated" by political trendmakers while Mr. Reagan "has been maddeningly indulged and over-praised," The Associated Press reported from Washington. In an editorial, The Post said Mr.

Pierce May Decline 2d Cabinet Term

DETROIT (AP) - Samuel R. Pierce, the only black member of President Ronald Reagan's cabinet, said he might decline a second term as secretary of housing and urban development for personal reasons if Mr. Reagan were re-elected.

"I'm sure I could stay," he said Saturday during a campaign stop in Detroit, "But there's no sense in speculating. I'll cross that bridge when I get to it."

The Detroit News reported Sunday that unidentified White House and campaign officials have said the administration would not encourage Mr. Pierce to remain in the cabinet for a second term. Mr. Pierce's spokesman. Robert Nipp denied that report.

Millions of New Voters Join Rolls in U.S. Registration Drives

Really a Roomy World?

In response to a reporter's question during his Oct. 21 debate with Walter Mondale, President Reagan asserted that "the population explosion, if you look at the actual figures, has been vastly exaggerated, over-exaggerated." A look at the actual figures, however, should persuade most people that it is hard to exaggerate the population pressures that now threaten much of the developing world.

Despite progress in restraining birthrates in many countries, the number of people added to the globe increases by a record amount each year. Growth rates are still high - and even rising — in many countries. As a result, the World Bank recently warned, world population will more than double to at least 10 billion people by the middle of the next century unless far stronger family planning efforts are made.

Mr. Reagan cited as the source of his optimism "some pretty scientific and solid figures about how much space there still is in the world and how many more people we can have." But much of that space is not inhabitable by any stretch of the imagination. Other areas are needed for farming and the maintenance of natural resources; soil erosion has already become a critical problem in many developing countries. Nor would affluent nations welcome the enormous influx of immigrants that would be necessary to relieve overcrowding in other countries. If the next 5 billion people were to be evenly distributed across the countries of the world, accommodating them in so short a time would still be difficult. But most of the newcomers will be added to the developing world, where economic pressures are already acute. Some countries. especially in Africa and Latin America, will see their populations multiplied several times during the next 65 years. To avoid social and economic collapse these countries will have to create jobs, educate young people and provide health care on an unprecedented scale.

Economic growth will certainly help many developing countries, but the countries with the most economic success are also those that have begun, with the help of active family planning programs, to curb population growth. In Central America — which, as the president acknowledged, will put the most immigration pressure on the United States the burgeoning youth population has already contributed to disastrons levels of unemployment and continuing social unrest.

White House denial of the existence of population problems has had one healthy effect. It has reminded Congress and the public, which heavily supports U.S. population aid to coun-tries that need and want it, of the importance of such help. Thus Congress this year voted to increase overseas population aid programs by more than 20 percent. That is an important boost, but still far short of what is needed.

The Enemy Isn't OPEC

OPEC's chickens appear to be coming home to roost. According to common belief, greed caused the cartel to raise the price of oil tenfold in a decade, triggering two world recessions. The same conventional wisdom now assumes that the recessions and widespread conservation have sent OPEC into retreat. allowing consumers to look forward to a long period of stable, lower oil prices.

Reality is not nearly that comforting. OPEC is more like a trade association than a cartel; its capacity to influence oil prices turns largely on the will of its most powerful member, Saudi Arabia. The two oil price shocks in the 1970s can be better attributed to disunity among consumers than unity among the producers. The members never did agree on how to apportion production. Equally undisciplined consumers are likely to be spared more price jolts in the next few years, but not in the 1990s.

It is commonly believed that OPEC twice used the excuse of conflict in the Middle East (the 1973 war and the 1979 Iranian revolution) to raise prices and make the rises stick by then cutting production. The truth is messier.

On the eve of the first shock the price of oil was markedly lower than even the production cost of alternative fuels. At 1973 prices demand was rapidly outracing production. The first OPEC price increase was initially sustained by panic buying; no collective action to hold up the price was needed. Saudi Arabia alone, the exporter with the least need for revenue, simply held down production to match demand. OPEC was Saudi Arabia.

The second shock had even less to do with OPEC's supposed monopoly power. Conservation had not yet taken hold; consumption was higher than ever. So when the Iranian revolution triggered another panic and another doubling of prices, the collapse of Iranian and then of Iraqi exports, plus further cuts by Saudi Arabia, were enough to sustain the increase for several years. Finally, though, the world's response to high oil prices put OPEC under pressure to act like a proper cartel. As oil consumption fell 15 percent from its 1979 peak and production from non-OPEC countries rose by 13 percent, OPEC was forced to absorb a 40-percent cut in sales. The pressure has proved too much. OPEC members now are openly cheating, producing more than their quotas and selling for considerably less than the official OPEC price.

Isn't that good news? Yes and no. It means lower oil bills, less inflation and more economic growth for a few years. It also means less conservation, less incentive to replace dwindling oil resources in North America and less pressure on consuming nations to build reserves. A growing proportion of the world's economically recoverable oil is in the Middle East. Unless America's policies change radi-cally, half the oil it consumes in 1990 will come from foreign wells. And by the mid-1990s Saudi Arabia, or whoever rules its oil fields, will be back in the driver's seat. It is comforting to think that OPEC has been the enemy and that it has been vanquished by its greed and our sacrifice. There is, alas, no OPEC to vanquish. The enemy is the inevitable scarcity of cheap, liquid fuel - and the unwillingness of those who depend on it to do what is needed to regain control of their destiny. The really greedy enemy is us.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

This One, That One, Neither

By almost all standards, we are better off than we were four years ago.

- The New York Daily News. Mr. Reagan's vision of an America embodying traditional values revived spirits bruised by years of discouragement over Vietnam, Watergate and the Iran hostage crisis.

- The Omaha World-Herald.

The Reagan administration ignores, rejects or simply stands ignorant of the institutionalized poverty and hopelessness eating at the bodies and tyrannizing the spirits of millions of Americans trapped in the backwaters beneath the national economic and social mainstream. The deeper essence of that administration has been racism with a smile.

- The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Once again we are respected by our allies. No longer are we pushed around by the Russians or humiliated by banana republics. - The Sunday Oklahoman (Oklahoma City).

Most of the policies we value are predicated on a sound economy. Mr. Reagan's economic ship is sailing forward; Mr. Mondale's would retrace a dismal and defeatist course.

- The Oregonian (Portland, Oregon).

It is our belief that the Reagan prosperity is the prosperity of living on borrowed money. Mr. Reagan, far from being the guardian of fiscal responsibility, has virtually destroyed whatever vestige of it there was.

- The Detroit Free Press.

The Sun will not endorse either candidate. We welcomed President Reagan's unapologetic readiness to have the United States play its role as a superpower, even while we deplored his indifference to civil rights and the disadvantaged. We challenged Walter Mondale's embrace of protectionism, even while we applauded his views on separation of church and state. We will do what we do best - which is to critique the candidates, day after day, on the basis of their performance and values. - The Baltimore Sun.

... and a British Conclusion

Mr. Reagan is not popular with the media or not, at least, with the East Coast elite that makes up the bulk of the serious commentators on American politics. Such people are for the most part "liberals" in the American sense - that is, left of center. The popularity of a conservative populist president makes the pundits uneasy. [But] why should people be-lieve that a policy which has produced lower inflation and more jobs with lower taxes is bad? What Mr. Reagan stands for is what most Americans want to believe in: their own virtue and their own strength. It is what their allies should want to believe in, too.

Just What Are the Nuclear Weapons For?

N EW YORK — Nuclear weapons have figured more prominently than almost any other foreign policy issue in America's presidential cam-paign. Yet the nuclear debate still lacks focus, in part because weapons programs and policies have been considered only piecemeal.

There are important differences between the Republican and Democratic approaches to arms control. These differences should not be obscured by election year rhetoric.

The Reagan administration and the Republican platform advocate a continued weapons buildup; the Democratic candidates and their platform call for a freeze and for pursuing only those weapons systems that would contribute to a stable nuclear deterrent. Yet neither party nor pair of candidates has addressed the question of nuclear doctrine the precise military purpose that they believe nuclear weapons should serve.

There are four possible positions: Nuclear weapons can serve no mission, because their use would amount to suicide. If that is judged to be the case, the objective should be rapid reduc-tions on both sides leading to abolition of nuclear weapons by all nations. The problem is that this objective would be difficult if not impossible to achieve in the foreseeable future.

Nuclear weapons can serve only the single mission of deterring nuclear attack against America and its allies. This would mean dropping plans for such potential first-strike weapons as the MX missile and joining the Soviets in negotiating a freeze followed by reductions of 90 percent or more. Both powers could afford such reductions because a few ndred nuclear warheads would suffice for the single purpose of deterring nuclear attack. At the same time, America and its allies would have to make sure that they could defend themselves conventionally without threatening nuclear attack. Nuclear weapons can serve the dual mission of deterring a nuclear attack and a large-scale non-nuclear attack against America and its allies. This has been the essence of NATO strategy since the alliance was formed in 1949. To continue it in the face of Soviet capability to respond in kind requires making a credible threat to commit suicide and take the Soviet Union along.

Something else shows when George Bush

A Few Nuclear Weapons Suffice to Deter

THERE is no military use for nuclear weapons, and the steady development and accumulation of them increases the danger of ultimate disaster. The only sound role for nuclear weapons is as a deterrent to their use by others. A very few nuclear eapons, certain of delivery, constitute a powerful deterrent.

No one knows how to use nuclear weapons in warfare. There are thousands of experts on technical matters and on military hardware, but on the critical issues of strategy, deterrence and the environment there are truly no experts. None! Each citizen should realize that on the critical issues of what constitutes enough, what is an adequate deterrent, whether humanity can recover from a nuclear war and many other such questions, his or her studied judgments are as good as those of a president.

We need to re-evaluate our premises and rethink our priorities.

By Jan H. Kalicki

Nuclear weapons can serve multiple missions. They can deter nuclear and nonnuclear attacks not only against close allies but wherever American leaders believe that U.S. interests are at stake, compelling the Russians to behave in certain ways and enabling the United States to prevail militarily in a nuclear war if it should occur. The Defense Department's five-year defense guidance envisions such multiple missions and therefore plans the expansion of existing nuclear stockpiles to include more powerful, more easily usable weapons.

Perhaps the most striking finding in a survey conducted throughout the United States last May by the Public Agenda Foundation, an organization for research and education, was that 74 percent of respondents opposed using nuclear weapons against conventional attack, thus opting for the single mission" —a fundamental revision of U.S. nuclear doctrine for some 35 years.

Surely the presidential candidates owe the American electorate and the allies some discussion of this issue. Should the United States carry on with its present policy, and if so, why? Or should it be moving away from a doctrine that relies on the threat of nuclear suicide to defend the security of allies, and if so, what would replace it?

State George Shultz, yet observe that the president has yet to permit or encourage the establish-

The case is equally applicable against resort to nuclear warfare by an ally of Britain in 1940. If the United States had already been in the war and had been a nuclear power, the last thing the United Kingdom would have wanted was the use of American nuclear weapons in face of a potential or actual invasion.

If Germany in 1940 had pos-sessed, but neither Britain nor an ally possessed, nuclear weapons, that would still have left Britain no worse off than the situation just considered, namely, where, ssing nuclear weapons, she

It is the position of the United States itself which clinches this argument in the negative. It must assume that its use of nuclear weapons in a European war would be attended by the probability of escalation, that is, of an inter-continental exchange. But no possible military success of Russia in Europe could justify inviting the destruction this exchange would inflict on America.

president, by all the evidence, genuinely does not understand the instability into which he has led the economy. He sticks with a few familiar and simple thoughts about incentives, hard work and the desirability of low taxes, even though there is nothing simple about this economy or the way the international capital flows are influencing

it. And the Reagan administration is poorly equipped to deal with any sort of a crisis in this area. The president has given too many of the key jobs in financial and economic policy to political cheerleaders - the economic and moral equivadent, has talked about the danger signs with candor and intelligence. Would he, as president, be able to carry out the cures that, as candidate, he has prescribed? Maybe not. To get a large tax increase through Congress would be an extra-ordinary feat in the best of circumstances. If the economy were to start sliding into another recession, it would be impossible. Mr. Mondale might then struggle to hold down unemployment by resorting to the protectionist legislation that he has — wrongly and inexcusably — embraced. But Mr. Mondale's strength is that he understands the risks here and that he is willing to detached smugness and superficiality that most mar his administration. He is praised for restoring values, but these values now have been reduced to slogans and propaganda. Mr. Mondale, too, has paid — for the slogging fight over the past couple of years against a broad array of competition to become his party's nominee. He bought some profoundly flawed positions — the freeze, which he is now, blessedly, applying the requisite qualifications to, and a variety of protectionist stands. But in contrast to his opponent he has been serious, straightforward and genu-inely engaged in the issues that the next president will have to deal with. He has, in the course of this phase of the campaign and, to some extent during the primary races, put some distance between himself and the impractical, muzzy-headed approach to foreign and security matters that so many in his party are suckers for. And where he erred in this direction earlier he seems to be moving back to stronger positions now.

Then there is Mondale the man. His record going back over the years demonstrates social and personal values that are the living embodiment of what the Reagan administration in its values pitch talks about. He is a decent man and a diligent, hardworking one who has been a good

Democratic leader before this year and, notably, in this campaign, in which he has evidenced strength and determination and a concern for others when he would have been justified in a descent into self-pity. And although we have noted the push-pull benefits on Democrats like

Yet to Test: Lame-Duck Presidency

By Tom Wicker

N EW YORK — If the polls are right and Ronald Reagan is about to be re-elected, he will be only the third president to win two terms since passage of the 22d Amendment in 1951 limited American presidents to eight years in office. If he should serve the full two terms, he would be only the second to do so under that amendment's limitation.

Dwight Eisenhower won and served two full terms. As the commanding general of European theater forces in World War II he was a personable hero who became, as president, a national father figure and a leader able to transcend ordinary political bounds. Even so, controversy continues as to whether he was weakened in his second term by the fact that he was a "lame duck" president barred from seeking re-election. Richard Nixon was elected twice, but from Inauguration Day 1973 to his resignation on Aug. 4, 1974, he was engulfed in Watergate and could devote little attention to anything else. So his short second term tells us little, if anything, about the 22d Amendment's political effects.

So a second term for Mr. Reagan could be looked at as the first real test of those effects, if any. Highly popular as he is, Mr. Reagan is still not the venerated and trusted figure that Mr Eisenhower became: nor, everyone must hope, will be be swamped in anything resembling Watergate. Is a president who cannot even threaten to run for re-election stripped of essential political powers? Harry Truman thought so, "You do not have to be very smart." he once said of a proposal to limit presidents to one six-year term. "to know that an officeholder who is not eligible for re-election loses a lot of influence. You have taken a man and put him in the hardest job in the world ... and you have sent him out to light with one hand tied behind his back."

Others believe the need to please the voters enough to win re-election distracts presidents from the public interest. If a president knows he for she) is serving his only or last term, in this view, he will be more willing to "do what's right for the country."
Well, if Mr. Reagan is returned to the White House maybe we will get some practical evidence as to whether or not being a "lame duck" makes any real difference. In his case, moreer, that status will be complicated by at least three major factors: • Mr. Reagan, who will be 73 at the start of a second term and 78 at the end, will almost certainly lose. over those four years, some of the force and energy with which he estab-lished his political leadership in his first term. Mr. Eisenhower's experience of aging — he left the White House at 70 — led him to say that no one older than that should serve in the presidency.

cession will be unusually complicated and could directly affect Mr. Reahave the services of the able Senate majority leader, Howard Baker, who has retired to begin a campaign for the Republican nomination in 1988. ate Finance Committee, will be a crucial figure in whatever action may be taken concerning taxes and the deficit -and he, too, is a likely candidate for president. Another, Representative Jack Kemp of New York, will have much to say about tax policy on the Republican side of the House, and might move early to cut in on Mr. vious of the hard political problems sure to face Mr. Reagan if he wins a second term. His Central America policies, for another good example, manifestly could lead to greater U.S. military involvement in Nicaragua or El Salvador or both, whether he intends it or not. What will he do, for example, if, against explicit administration warnings, Nicaragua equips itself with fighter aircraft from the Soviet Union or Cuba?

A somewhat related desire to allow elements of a highly secret anti-terrorist and special operations group to show what they could do also left several major objectives of the Grenada operation unsecured

Airborne Division stall in the face

Some critics believe that an official assessment of U.S. performance has been smothered because of embarrassment about what were either mistakes or anomalies on the part of some units.

William S. Lind, an adviser to Brazil Race Senator Gary Hart, the Colorado Democrat and one of the intellectual mentors of the so-called military reform caucus in Congress, said in an interview that "the major lesson learned is that the Pentagon refuses to learn lessons." He suggested that the reluctance of politically ap-pointed civilian officials and generfor many hours, according to some al officers to concede any flaws had thwarted the normal process of self-criticism by the military ser-

> Mr. Lind was the author of a brief analysis for the 80-member congressional military reform group, a paper that found a good deal of fault with the performance of almost all units committed to the invasion, except a marine amphibious unit that Mr. Lind describes as having done "brilliant" work.

> For example, Mr. Lind asks, "Why did the 82d Airborne Division take three days to move five kilometers [three miles]?" Actually, only two battalions of the division were involved in this movement. but these 1,500 men greatly out-numbered the fewer than 500 Cubans, most of them construction workers with only militia training. The army analyst says that another reason that rapid advances were not made against armed op-position, except in the case of the marines, who had little opposition, was that "there was an obsession about getting into another hostage crisis such as Tehran in the Carter administration. This thing wasn't run as a normal military operation but almost entirely as a rescue operation to avoid humiliating the country again."

Nevertheless, sizable numbers of the American medical students were not rescued until 36 hours after the original landings. Had Cuban and Grenadian armed forces chosen to harm students or take them hostage, it would have been relatively easy in two of three student residences.

Sources said that the mission to take the Richmond Hill prison and release political prisoners was not only unsuccessful but resulted in the death of a helicoper pilot and the destruction of his aircraft. The radio station was not taken by the special operations group that attacked it, and 250 marines and five marine tanks were sailed around the island to relieve a unit that had been pinned down at the house of the governor general, Paul Scoon.

When three helicopters plowed into one another in an assault on an empty Cuban barracks, three soldiers were killed by flailing rotor blades or crushed. Two marine gunships were shot down earlier. One soldier was killed by a navy fighter bomber. Such accidents are not unknown in war, but the percentage seemed high to critics.

ARTS/LEISURE

A Sketch of Illustrator Hippolyte Romain

PARIS — Three years ago, few people had heard of illustrator Hippolyte Romain. Today, he is all over the map.

Besides being a regular on the fashion scene for La Mode en Peinture, Vogue Sport, Passion, Libération and l'Express, he covers music for Rock and Folk, and culture for La Croix (a Catholic daily,) for whom he recently illustrated the Saint Tropez video festival.

Lately, his reputation has spread outside of France. In Germany, he has been written up in Stern and in New York, the editor of Vanity Fair, Tina Brown, ordered two sets of illustrations from the versatile Romain, including one on the brothels of Singapore. He has also published a comic strip book, "Ces Cheries," which deals with the wackier side of fashion. Last week. five of his drawings were auctioned off at the Salle Drouot, making between 1,000 (about $108) and 1,500 francs apiece.

His most recent venture has been painted garments. He started painting the backs of natural-colored canvas raincoats (which were snapped up by German fashion editors) and went on to T-shirts. which he first sold at the Flea Market. Bloomingdale's recently placed a large order for the shirts.

Romain's success didn't occur overnight, "I come from a petitbourgeois Parisian family." he said "They weren't too happy when I became a father at 16. They dropped me fast and I had to take any job I could get."

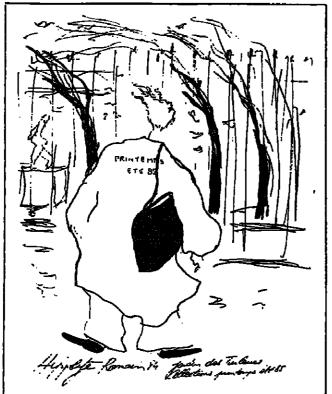

Romain, who says curiosity is his hest asset always wanted to be a journalist. "I was in awe of Paris Match correspondents, I would have loved to write but I wasn't as a journalist who tells a story with sketches instead of words, believes he can get to a lot of places that would be barred to photographers.

"In Singapore, I went into streets which are closed to photogra-phers," he said. "But nobody is suspicious of artists." This fact allowed him to sketch the fashion scene in East Berlin -- "drab, very drab" --- where, again, his presence went virtually unnoticed. "Drawing is innocent," Romain says.

Romain, 37, with his long curls framing a face lit by kind eyes, looks like a naive poet in a children's book. But his drawings are anything but innocent and many of them qualify as vitriolic. His vision of fashion editors, for instance, is terribly funny — but in a scary and sobering way. So are his sketches of fashion designers and fashion

The editors are a worried lot of women who seem to go from one crisis to the next. Designers have often succeeded in fashion while dreaming of doing something else. Look at Mugler. It's clear he would have loved to be a movie actor. That's why he's so influenced by Hollywood. With his sense of colors. Kenzo could have been a painter. Karl Lagerfeld is a businessman extraordinaire and Cardin is Monsieur Le Prince."

Romain says he loves the fashion world, even if he does not take it seriously. "It's an amusing world," be said, "but it's amazing bow people who work in fashion lack a sense of humor. All of them would like to think that fashion is the eighth art, which may be a bit

Rolling Stone Gathers a Rare Portrait of Chagall

By Marilyn August

Associated Press France — They may go down in art history as one of the oddest couples of all time: a millionaire rock star and one of the world's greatest living artists.

Bill Wyman of the Rolling Stones has produced a book of his photographs of Marc Chagall and of the reclusive Russian-born rench painter's works.

Besides reproductions of nearly 50 drawings, poster colors and mosaics, "Chagall's World," published this month by Doubleday & Co., contains 20 portraits of the 97-year-old artist taken last year in his armhouse retreat.

The unlikely collaboration be-numbers once mirrored the discontent of a generation, and an artist famous for his green-faced fiddlers and sad-eyed rabbis, is the result of a long friendship.

Wyman and Chagall, neighbors in this tiny Provençal village for the past 10 years, met through Andre Verdet, Chagall's friend and a French art critic. They used to sip afternoon tea with Chagall's wife,

"For some reason, we just clicked," the 47-year-old Wyman said in an interview.

One day he brought along his camera — he rarely goes anywhere without at least two cameras and a few lenses - and the book was

"Chagall usually doesn't like Wyman does not own a Chagall having his picture taken, but I painting. "I'd have to have it copthink he trusted me as a photograied and put the original in the pher," Wyman said. "He's easy to shoot because he has so many different expressions — I just stood in a corner of the room with a long lens and snapped the shutter."

Verdet interviewed Chagall as Wyman snapped pictures and the interview, one of the last given by the now ailing artist, is featured in the 128-page book.

Wyman said their relationship is based on mutual respect, even though he is not sure Chagall likes, or even knows the Stones' music. "It doesn't matter," he said, adding that he does not comment on Cha-

"I like Chagall because he makes a statement, really strong — bam," Wyman said. "I love the movement of the colors. I love the animals and the married couples and the little villages and crooked houses all one color, all falling over."

Wyman, the Stones' bass guitar ist, was a camera buff long before he became a rock star. "My uncle gave me a small box camera for my 10th birthday. I saved up --- delivering papers and milk - to buy film, and I've been shooting ever gall's work. He once gave the artist since. If I hadn't gotten involved a Stones' album but Chagall never with music, I would have been a reacted.

BEFORE YOU THINK PERSONAL COMPUTERS, THINK COMMUNICATIONS.

Buy an industry-standard personal computer from a world leader in communications, and you get something extra – the ITT XTRA.

A professional communicator specifically designed to grow with your every computing and communications requirement.

ALL THE WORLD'S SOFTWARE

It runs the world's best-selling software, and in local language versions, so you'll always have the programs you need.

Database, spreadsheets, graphics, word processing – you name it, the ITT XTRA takes it all in its stride.

And each of the four models in the range communicates in your language across the entire spectrum of business applications.

THE INS AND OUTS OF GOOD DESIGN

The ITT XTRA is a professional personal computer. Since it's made by ITT, that's no surprise.

The tilting, swivelling monitor can be adjusted to suit your working position exactly. It takes up the minimum of desk space – you don't have to sit it on a bulky box of electronics.

And there's a choice of monitors – green, amber or colour – all with high-resolution, glare and smudge-resistant screens. While the compact, ergonomically designed keyboard, with sculptured keys and home row indicators, is a pleasure to use.

THE WORLD AT YOUR KEYBOARD

You become more productive, quicker, with the ITT XTRA.

And because it's a professional communicator rather than just another personal computer, you'll never have to keep that extra output to yourself.

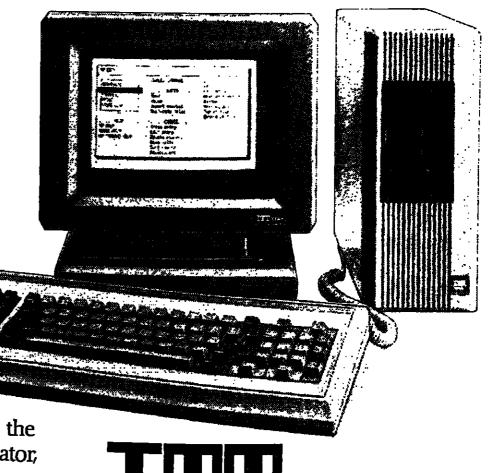

The built-in communications and five expansion slots mean direct access to other micros, mainframes and networks; plus worldwide electronic mail, access to Videotex systems, such as Prestel, and, in the near future, simultaneous voice and data transmissions.

So while conventional personal computers come and go, the ITT XTRA, a professional communicator, is here to stay. Which would you rather have – a conventional personal computer, or a system that offers something extra?

With the way business communications are developing, it pays to go for the extra.

ITT XTRA, the professional communicator.

FUTURES AND OPTIONS

Farm Options Trading Seen Attracting Investors

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

New York Times Service

EW YORK — Following the Commodity Futures Trading Commission's approval of the "second wave" of options on futures on Monday, trading in options on soybeans, cotton, live cattle and several varieties of wheat futures will begin on Tuesday for the first time on domestic

The farm options, as the trade calls them, are considered the most important development in the futures and options industry since the federal regulatory agency approved the "first wave" of options on futures in 1982. This experimental program produced the successful options on Treasury bonds and other financial debt instruments, foreign exchange and various stock in-

It also led to the first do-mestic exchange-traded op-tions on a farm product, supar, on Oct. 1, 1982. But the options on world sugar futures have not done well because that market and indeed all farm-futures markets are in a sorry state.

introduced when

The options are being that market and indeed an those in basic farm produce have been depressed in recent years. Options are the right, but not the obligation, to buy (call) or self (put) the underlying futures or cash equivalent of the goods involved at a fixed price for a specified period of time. The option cost is known as the premium.

AR more important to option traders — who do not care whether prices go up or down as long as they are volatile—is that trading in the underlying farm futures has fallen dramatically in recent months as prices have meandered in generally narrow ranges.

In September, for example, trading in soybeans, once the most actively traded futures contract, plunged to 500,000 contracts on the Chicago Board of Trade, from 1.6 million a year before. The Chicago Mercantile Exchange's live cattle-futures market shrank to 181,000 contracts, from 344,000. And, on the New York Cotton Exchange, cotton futures volume slumped to 39,500 contracts, from 122,000 in September 1983.

But the volume of world sugar options on New York's Coffee, Sugar, and Cocoa Exchange rose to 1,500 contracts last month, from 542 a year earlier.

from 542 a year earlier.

Given the sorry state of the farm futures markets in general, is this the time to introduce options on these contracts? Charles B. Clement, chairman of the options committee at the Chicago Board of Trade, says it is.

"The farm options will bring a new class of people, largely investors, to the futures market," Mr. Clement said. "Specifically, these investors will be more interested in the chances of their calls and puts turning a profit over a longer period than is the case with

As for the steady decline in the volume of the underlying futures, he said: "Based on our experience with the first wave of options, we expect this market to stimulate volume in the underlying futures because they will in effect afford hedgers, traders, arbitragers, and speculators the ability to offset risks in two David T. Johnston, senior vice president and a director of E.F. Hutton & Co., was somewhat more cautious about the new options. "The new farm options and those that the exchanges are planning to introduce next year will be successful only if the premiums are reasonable and the farmers and commercial users of farm produce find it economic and convenient to use them for hedging," he said, "and we won't know this for some time." As it is, Mr. Johnston said, few farmers use futures to hedge their crops or lock in prices at harvest time. One major reason is that the farmer, who cares about the prices he gets, sells his crops to dealers who do not care about the prices he pays or gets, he

The dealers do use futures to hedge the crops moving through their elevators or warehouses. But the dealers do not use the futures to fix or lock in prices. For example, a grain elevator operator, working for a farmer co-op or for himself, offers the farmer a price based on the current market quote. Once bought, (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Credit Controls To Be Simpler

By Axel Krause

PARIS - Pierre Bérégovoy, France's finance minister, said Monday that the government will establish a new and simplified sys-tem of controlling credit of French-domiciled banks to facilitate their lending to consumers and business-

But French government officials emphasized that the move did not represent a shift in the govern-ment's restrictive monetary policy. It should lead to what an official described as "a long overdue sim-plification and improvement in the way the government controls cred-

The new system, effective Jan. 1, 1985, will replace the credit super-vision system established in 1972, known as l'encodrement, which has been widely criticized by French and foreign bankers as being un-wieldy to administer, confusing and unrelated to the level of real interest rates. It involved establish-ment of monthly lending quotas by the Bank of France on a bank-bybank basis and was tied to credits granted in the previous year. The new system, aimed at encouraging banks to build up their capital reserves, will establish lend-ing volume based on obligatory re-serves placed by banks with the Bank of France, the minister said.

Mr. Bérégovoy also said that the government would set a rate of be-tween 4 and 6 percent for the exnsion of the money supply in 1985, which compares with a target of 5.5 to 6.5 percent in 1984. French and U.S. bankers said that they were puzzled by the minister's announcement and that many questions regarding details of the plan remained unanswered. We understand that the system will be more flexible to administer, but we do not know the specifics or the conditions, which will deter-mined lending in the future," a senior French banker said.

Finance ministry and Bank of France officials are to meet Wednesday to work out details.

Only Business for Germany's Flick Is the Business of Owning Businesses

But unlike Siemens AG, Daimler-Benz AG and other manufacturing stalwarts of the West German economy whose market power is visible daily through myriad products bearing their label, Flick has no business of its own other than the business And it is this business — buying and selling stakes in industrial companies — that is the root of Flick's troubles and the accusations that it used bribes in the mid-1970's to elicit favorable govern-

Financial records kept by Rudolf Diehl, Flick's chief accountant in the 1970s, indicate that the company may have paid some 25 million DM to company may have paid some 25 million DM to the major political parties and to gain favor with leading politicians, according to widely published accounts in the West German press.

Two former economics ministers, Otto Lambsdorff and his predecessor, Hans Friderichs, and Eberhard von Brauchitsch, Flick's former deputy chairman, have been indicated on corruption charges growing out of the scandal All three have charges growing out of the scandal. All three have denied the government's allegations.

Specifically, the company's tax-evasion imbroglio, dubbed the "Flick Affair," dates back to 1975 when it netted just under 1.9 billion DM from the sale of a 27 percent stake in Daimler-Benz to

State investigators say that in an effort to avoid having to pay large capital gains taxes on that profit, Flick's management, then Mr. von Brauchitsch, bribed high-placed Bonn officials to obtain an 800-million-DM tax-exemption.

Flick, allegedly with the aid of financial sweetners, was able to convince the responsible officials that by reinvesting the large capital gain from Daimler in a major overseas company, Flick should qualify for a tax waiver in accord with should qualify for a tax waiver in accord with provisions on tax exemption under German law, Currently, Flick has holdings in more than 60 companies worldwide. These include a 27 percent stake, purchased with revenue from the Daimler sale, in W.R. Grace & Co., the U.S. chemical sale, in W.R. Grace & Co., the U.S. chemical concern, and a 10 percent stake in Daimler-Benz AG, maker of Mercedes. The Grace and Daimler investments alone yielded 99 million DM and 33 million DM in revenue, respectively, in 1983.

The government now says Flick owes 450 million DM in back taxes on the 800-million-DM waiver granted as a result of the bribes.

But a financial penalty of several hundred million DM would not likely throw off the expansion plans of a commany which has reported sales of 10

plans of a company which has reported sales of 10 billion DM and gross cash flow of 730 million DM.

Last year, Flick was ranked as the 26th-largest of all West German companies, with reported revenue for its consolidated group of 9.49 billion DM, up 10.2 percent from 1982. The group posted 1983 net profit of 295 million DM, the 13th-largest profit of 295 million DM, the 13 net recorded among all West German companies that year, compared with 95 million DM a year

A Flick spokesman, Manfred Kiesewetter, called "ludicrous" a world sales figure of 24 billion DM cited in various press articles, which takes into account a percentage of sales at Grace, Daimler, and a West German insurer, Gerling AG, where Flick holds minority stakes. He said Flick's revenue should be based strictly on the results of those companies majority-owned and consolidated by the Flick group.

But the real potential of today's Flick group and its management is not to be gauged so much by its ranking on charts as it is by the breadth of its industrial activities, including tanks, paper, chemicals, machinery and steel.

Hans Werner Kolb, a Flick partner who re-placed Mr. von Brauchitsch two years ago, said recently that the company was preparing to sink several hundred million DM "in nearly every ma-jor area of industry" over the next four to six years. While the day-to-day operations are run by Mr. Kolb and others out of company headquarters in Duesseldorf, the chairman, Friedrich Karl Flick, charts his company's broader course in the quiet of his private home outside Munich.

Mr. Flick, 57, recently was listed as the second wealthiest person in Europe by Quick, a popular West German magazine that estimated his worth at 6 billion DM. He assumed full control at Flick 1982, upon the death of his father, the group's

Productivity In U.S. Was Flat In 3d Quarter

WASHINGTON - U.S. industrial productivity in the third quarter remained at second-quarter levels, the first stagnant period since the second quarter of 1982, the Labor Department said Monday.

The figures provided further evidence of a slowing in the U.S. economy. As reported, orders to U.S. factories plunged 4.3 percent in September, the sharpest decline in five months. Factories, manes and utilities opperated at $1.9 percent of the percent capacity in September, down from $2.6 percent in August, while the Commerce Department said that the gross national product of the United States increased at a 2.7percent annual rate in the third quarter, less than half the rate of the first half of the year.

Gross national product measures the total value of a nation's output of goods and services, including income from foreign investments. The Bureau of Labor Statistics said Monday worker productivity in the non-farm business sector from July 1 to Sept. 30 showed no change.

The standstill in non-farm pro-ductivity followed a healthy rate of advance of 5.5 percent in the sec-ond quarter, according to revised government figures.

By contrast, productivity in the manufacturing sector showed an 8-percent annual rate of gain. The bureau noted that "productivity movements in manufacturing and the more comprehensive non-farm business sector do not always agree. Since 1974, they have moved in opposite directions nearly one-third of the time."

Economists See Single-Digit Inflation in 1980s

"We've passed the crisis stage," said A. Gary Shilling, a private eco-nomic consultant in New York. If there is a recession next year, he said, the rate could drop as low as 2 percent, well under the 4.2-percent rise over the 12 months through Sept. 30 that the Labor Department reported last Wednesday.

Martin S. Feldstein, who has returned to Harvard University after two years as chairman of President Ronald Reagan's Council of Eco-nomic Advisers, says it is possible that the inflation rate could rise to 5 percent or 6 percent next year but then drift back to 4 percent. Some economists have been restraining their cheers, but for different reasons. To some, 4-percent inflation marks real progress, compared with the rates of more than 12 percent that the economy experienced in 1981 and 1982. But they add that the rate is still well above the level of the 1950s and that any inflation at all is a blot of instability on an otherwise sound econo-

To others, government policies designed to bring the rate down still further invite higher unem-ployment. THE BEST AMERICAN SHORT STORIES 1984

Selected from U.S. and Canadian magazines by John Updike with Shannon Ravenel. 295 pp.

$14.95 hardback, $8.95 paperback. Houghton Mifflin, I Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by Jonathan Yardley

I N his thoughtful introduction to this collec-tion of the 20 stories be chose as last year's best by American and Canadian writers, John Updike addresses himself to the question, much discussed in literary circles, of the shrinking popular market for short fiction. He notes that by comparison with a half-century ago, a writer cannot expect to support himself by selling stories to mass-circulation maga-zines as William Faulkner and F. Scott Fitzgerald (and many others) did, and he makes this astute observation:

"Now, for the bright young graduates that pour out of the Iowa Writers' Workshop and its sister institutions, publishing short stories is a kind of accreditation, a certificate of worthiness to teach the so-called art of fiction. The popular market for fiction has shriveled while the academic importance of 'creative writing' has swelled; academic quarterlies, operating under one form of subsidy or another, absorb some of the excess. The suspicion persists that short fiction, like poetry since Rudyard Kipling and Robert Seymour Bridges, has gone from being a popular to a fine art, an art preserved in a kind of floating museum made up of many little superfluous magazines."

Thus it is that of these 20 stories, 14 originally appeared in quarterlies: The Georgia Review (two), The Crescent Review, MSS, Antaeus (two), Ascent, CutBank, Black Warrior Review, The Greensboro Review (two), The Paris Review, Stories and The Yale Review. Five of the others appeared in The New York-er, and one in Esquire. The tone of the stories reflects the audience to which they are ad-dressed; they tend to be elliptical, terse, "literary," as is the vogue in the writing schools these

The best of them, though, are very good indeed, and the best come not from The New Yorker — with the exception of "Glimpse Into Another Country," by the estimable Wright Morris — but from the quarterlies. This probably has less to do with a swell of talent in the writing schools than with Updike's careful process of selection; in reading through the stories he sought out "those that somehow, in addition to beginning energetically and ending intelligi-bly, gave me a sense of deep entry, of entry into life somewhat below the surface of dialogue and description," a criterion that automatically excluded stories in the diffident, minimalist style favored by devotees of Ann Beattie and Interestingly, though probably not signifi-cantly, many of the stories are about death, but for the most part not lugubriously so. Dianne-Benedict's "Unknown Feathers," Mary Ward

Brown's "The Cure." Mavis Gallant's "Lena," Mary Hood's "Inexorable Progress," Susan Minot's "Thorofare." Jonathan Penner's Things to Be Thrown Away" - all deal in one way or another with what Hood calls "the inexorable progress toward the dark, the sealing the losing sight of, the closing. But there's not much sobbing or sighing here: as the drunken old doctor says to the ailing woman in Brown's story, "What's you've got, Auntie, is the same thing I've got — old age. There ain't but one cure for it." Confronting their characters with that cure, these writers tend, like Brown's doctor, to let them "get . . . back up for a while." Not surprisingly, given the relative youth of many of the authors, children figure importantly in several of the stories. One of the best of these is Jeanne Schinto's "Caddies' Day." wherein a rather obnoxious little girl gets an emphatic if ultimately gentle comeuppance at the hands of a few bored and horny men. James Salter's "Foreign Shores" seems to revolve around a five-year-old boy and his au pair caretaker, but as Updike correctly notes, the real center of business is his divorced

In Rick DeMarinis's "Gent," another mother is the center of attention, and what her 12year-old son learns about her gives him no comfort; this funny, troubling, haunting story is Updike's real discovery, the story that for me makes the whole endeavor worthwhile. But two makes the whole endeavor worthwhile. But two others get honorable mention: "Morrison's Reaction," by Stephen Kirk, a hilarious account of a long day in the dentist's chair, and "The Cold Room," by Lowry Pei, in which a confused young man realizes that he has fastened his romantic interests on the wrong the more than the mo woman and hastens, if guiltily, to attach them where they belong.

There's nothing cosmic to say about this group of stories, and Updike wisely refrains from trying. The best of them are intelligent. imaginative and handsomely written. They deserve to be read by a wider audience than the quarterlies reach, and Updike deserves our gratitude for finding them.

Broncos Beat Raiders, 22-19, With Field Goal in Overtime

LOS ANGELES - Rich Kartis kicked a 35-yard field goal as time expired in overtime Sunday to give the Denver Broncos a 22-19 National Football League victory over the Los Angeles Raiders. Safety Roger Jackson set up the winning score by intercepting a pass from Raider quarterback Marc Wilson and returned it 23 yards to the Raiders' 22-yard line with 38 seconds remaining. Sammy Winder then ran for four yards before the Broncos' let the clock run down to five seconds and called

Los Angeles had a chance to win the game in the opening minute of the overtime. A 41-yard pass from Wilson to Malcolm Barnwell put the ball at the Denver II-yard line. But on the next play running back Frank Hawkins fumbled and defensive back Steve Foley recovered for Denver at the Broncos' 7.

Giants 37, Redskins 13 In East Rutherford, New Jersey, Joe Morris scored on three short runs and Phil Simms passed for two touchdowns as New York beat Washington, 37-13. The victory was the Giants' first over the Redskins in seven NFL games dating back to 1981.

Morris scored on 2- and 1-yard sweeps in the first and second quarters, respectively, and on a 5-yard sprint off right guard in the third

Simms completed 18 of 29 passes for 339 yards, firing a 22-yard touchdown pass to Earnest Gray in the first quarter and an 8-yard TD toss to Bobby Johnson on the opening play of the fourth quarter that gave New York a 37-6 lead.

49ers 33, Rams 0

In Anaheim, California, Joe Montana threw for 365 yards and three touchdowns as San Francisco blanked Los Angeles, 33-0. Montana, the conference's top-rated passer this season, completed 21 of his 31 attempts, including a stretch beginning in the second quarter when he completed 13 straight, ac-counting for 263 yards.

"One way of doing this is to pretend it's just a game like 'Show and Tell.' Another might be to sing 'Row, Row, Row Your Boat."

"After the attack is over, and the fallout ashes have settled, classes will be dismissed and students will be told to go directly home. It's quite possible that it will take several weeks to get the school repaired, in which case students will have to make up their classes during the summer vacation.

Chatting With Acerbic Joseph Alsop

By William E. Farrell New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Come spend about two hours in the living room of Joseph Alsop, the retired columnist whose quick pen and even quicker tongue were once dreaded by many of the powerful and whose wide-ranging scholarly interests enunciated in aristocratic nasalities, at countless Washington dinner parties, caused the envious to label him a pedant and a dilettante. The conversation goes something like this: From Homo erectus to the Reagan administration.

To an expose of the artistic cribbing that went into the construction of the Arch of Constantine in Rome. To some scathing commentary on the Carter administration. To an assessment of Franklin D. Roosevelt by a distant relative. To his views on artists ranging from an ancient Egyptian, Imho-tep, to the modernists Mark Rothko and Willem de Kooning.

To what it was like to live in

There is absolutely no reason, Alsop will tell you, for him to be interviewed because he is a "hasbeen." Actually, Alsop, a Washington fixture who just turned 74, embarking on a new venture,

He sits in his living room in Georgetown, chain-smoking cigarettes inserted in a white filter, nursing a gener-ous Scotch in a goblet and surveying the thousands of wellnbed books that line the walls from floor to high ceiling.

A question about contempo rary politics is quickly fended off: 'I don't want to talk about politics. I've done with it. I'm a has-

After a pause he launches into monologue on American politics steeped in history and laced with observations from his experience. Of his distant relative, Franklin D. Roosevelt, he says reverentially: "The greatest president of this century — Franklin Roosevelt set the standard for all of us." A slight edge creeps in when he speaks of "my virtuous Alsop has had heart surgery in the last two years. "It's been my observation that you go on living like a young man until suddenly you're an old man," he said. "It's a bore. There's absolutely nothing to recommend old age. It's a great deal easier if you can have a pleasant house and a good cook, which is no doubt the result of unfairness and inequality. But so be it. Sixty-two years after he left his homeland in the aftermath of the Bolshevik revolution, the remains reburied with pomp Monday among heroes of Soviet life and culture. A recording of Chaliapin singing a dirge by Jules Massenet played in the background as the simple wood coffin was lowered into what a speaker called "the rich soil of the motherland." Scores of guests, including some of the cur-rent stars of the Bolshoi theater and Chaliapin's three surviving children, gathered around the grave in the rain. Chaliapin, who died in 1938 and was buried in Paris, was placed beside his daughter, Irina, in a section of the Novodevichi Cemetery in Moscow that includes two of his greatest contemporaries, the tenor Leonid Sobinov and the so-prano Antonina Nezhdanova. Chaliapin played in the world's top opera houses at the turn of the century and was an important cultural figure in post-revolutionary Russia. But Chaliapin became disillusioned with the burgeoning cultural establishment and never re-turned from a 1922 European tour.

O'Toole's performance Friday night in Dublin before a audience of about 1,000, including Irish President Patrick Hillery, sparked of Fyodor Chalispin, the greatest beekling and a walkout by several bass in Russian opera history, were dozen people who had paid £25 reburied with pomp Monday (about $30) a ticket for the reopening of the Gasety Theater. The actor was reading a piece by 18thcentury Irish author Jonathan Swift entitled "A Modest Proposal," when some members of the audience shouted "disgusting" and "offensive." O'Toole said the reading was meant to show what he called "Swift's savage indignation." The author wrote the piece as an attack on certain economic theories and had "a little something to offend everybody," the actor said.
